Pacific & Idaho Northern Railway, spoke on railroads as increasers of realty values and the moral responsibility of such corporations.

Reilly Atkinson, secretary of the Boise Commercial Club, gave his ideas of Boise as a railway terminus.

The feature of the evening se sion was an address by C. E. S. Wood, on state-aideded railroads He compared the state of Oregon with Washington and said that Washington's progress was due to railways and Oregon remained primitive because of lack of railroad development. The remedy, he said, is railways built by the state. Colonel Wood then discussed the arguments against state built railways. He alleged that political graft and state bankruptcy were impossible because the recall could be used against dishonest officials. The railway, when completed, he declared, could be leased to private parties. He closed his address expering h in an impassioned appeal for missionaries to carry his doctrine throughout the state as a solution for Oregon's transportation difficulties and her backward never state of development.
